Annapolis, Maryland – January 13, 2009 – Team 4Mil, a team of eight military veterans representing each branch of the US Armed Forces, announced that it has registered to compete in the world's most respected and longest running annual endurance event in June 2010. Captain Dan Schindler, USNR, Team 4Mil's spokesperson, defined the team's mission to successfully compete in RAAM to commemorate the sacrifices of all those who have served their country, generate charitable contributions for the Wounded Warrior Project, and make a positive contribution to military recruiting and public relations. Schindler says, "I'm proud that we are able to showcase a proud heritage of military service and demonstrate our sustained support to members of our wounded warrior family".

Fred Boethling, President/CEO of RAAM, LLC expressed delight at Team 4Mil's announcement stating, "I'm thrilled that Team 4Mil, our first US military team entry, will challenge RAAM's already competitive landscape. We are honored by their presence and invite other military organizations to join in the competition".

The 2010 RAAM will be the 29th edition of the race. Racers will start in Oceanside, California and finish in Annapolis, Maryland. Solo racers will make the 3000-mile trip in 8 to 12 days and teams in 5 to 8 days. Captain Kyle Pitman, USMC, Team 4Mil's Racing Captain, noted the significant challenge confronting his team but stated that, "members of the military are uniquely trained to endure hardship, work together as a unified team, and complete the mission. We are treating the race as an important operation and fully expect to achieve superior results!".
